Accolades

“What comes through so well is that violence against women is not an isolated crime committed here and there but deliberate and well-established conduct. I know (this film) is going to make a great difference in people’s understanding.”

Deborah Tucker, MPA, President
National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence

“The film was one of the best films I’ve ever seen that addressed domestic violence...
It was incredibly powerful. Thank you so much for this significant piece of work. It has changed me forever.”

Gretta Gardner, JD, Family Violence Director
Travis County Justice Planning, Austin, TX

“Movies speak to people, especially if they are done well. This film speaks volumes!”

Kirsha Haverlah, MPA, Government Relations
Travis County Constables Office, Austin TX

“Finding Jenn's Voice is an extremely effective training tool for anyone who seeks to incorporate diverse survivor's voices into trainings on intimate partner violence, intimate partner homicides and risk assessment.”

David Adams, PhD, Co-Founder/Co-Director
Emerge, Cambridge, MA

"Pregnant women face an even greater risk for danger in abusive relationships. Finding Jenn's Voice beautifully explores this neglected phenomenon through the heartbreaking story of a woman who was killed because of her pregnancy and through the inspiring, complex stories of survivors of intimate partner violence, offering an instructional and insightful educational experience for individuals, organizations, and classrooms."

Rae Taylor, PhD – Chair, Associate Professor of Criminology
Loyola University New Orleans

“This film remains a critically needed ‘voice’ not only for Jenn, but for our society and systems in which victims fall through. The emotional, physical, financial, sexual, and spiritual impact of Domestic Violence is not a relational problem, it is OUR sociological problem to solve through education, prevention, intervention and support services. Finding Jenn’s Voice is a reminder, and a rally call, that we are not there yet. “
